Serial testing and immunocytological examination of fluorescent antibody (FA) for rapid diagnosis of toxoplasmosis in AIDS. Fluorescent antibody (FA) for the early diagnosis of toxoplasmosis in acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) was studied. The test was carried out at four centers participating in the AIDS Clinical Trial Group (ACTG) from January 1989 to June 1991. The initial screening was performed using 662 paired blood samples. A second group of 2622 consecutive blood samples was studied. A positive reaction, indicative of a recent infection, was seen in 4.6% of the 662 samples from the first group and 1.4% of the 2622 samples from the second group. The risk of developing an untreated toxoplasmosis was four times higher in the presence of an FA positive reaction in the serological test at the beginning of the study. Rapid diagnosis of toxoplasmosis for the early initiation of treatment is highly recommended. When two mean-spirited

Republican candidates for Wisconsin's Board of Public Works sat down to debate last month in Waukesha, it was the Democratic challenger who couldn't keep a straight face. "With all due respect to you, on the merits of the policy proposals, I disagree with most of them," Sarah Beadle, a member of the DPA, said. "I think it's incumbent upon us to put them on the table and tell people what the real answers are to their problems, and not just adopt solutions from the point of view of a conservative who thinks you're going to
